In memory of Mrs Joan Ann Adderley

Joan Ann Adderley was a dedicated and active member of the Armadale Primary School P&C from 1983 to 1995, during the time her three children attended the school. She quickly became a valued volunteer and served as P&C President in the mid-1980s, always willing to step forward and support the school community with kindness and commitment.

One of Joan's most significant contributions was her key involvement in the relocation of Armadale Primary School from the town centre to its current site on Carradine Road. During the planning stages between 1985 and 1987, she worked closely with the P&C, school leadership and local representatives to advocate for parents and students. Joan played an important role in discussions around the school's design, grounds, safety, accessibility, parking and sporting areas, helping shape the welcoming school environment we know today.

Joan's dedication and thoughtful advocacy were highly valued by the school principal and the wider community during what was a complex and sensitive transition. Joan sadly died in September 2022, and in recognition of her contributions and lasting impact on the school community, the Armadale Primary School P&C has dedicated a plaque in her honour. Her efforts helped ensure the school would be a safe and welcoming place for generations of students and families, leaving a lasting legacy within the Armadale community. The Joan Ann Adderley plaque will be displayed near the breezeway and uniform shop, ensuring her contribution and legacy continue to be remembered by the Armadale Primary School community.
